To whom it may concern,

I am writing this letter in celebration of the excellent work completed by Sebastian Bruce, a Computer Programming Student at Georgian College. Sebastian was a key group member for the document automation project of a Student Semester Plan. The students applied their skills and learning to address a need expressed by me to create a tool to use individual course syllabi information and input it into the existing semester plan template, simplifying a manual process. This tool helps students with the creation of a document that keeps track of important due dates and their weight for each semester, keeping them more organized and encouraging them to grow time management awareness and skills. I had the pleasure of collaborating with them on this task and I was consistently impressed by their professionalism, expertise and efficiency in working through the process. They executed the task in a way that ensured I fully understood the progress that was being made despite my limited knowledge of the actual “how” they would accomplish this. I felt confident at all stages in their ability. They addressed my feedback quickly and made changes where appropriate. Much of this work was done in a fully volunteer capacity and is greatly appreciated.

I am thrilled to report that the finalized program does what it set out to do and will hopefully be of benefit in our work with many students, and staff as we work together in pursuit of student success.

Sincerely,

Heather Harrison
